

A high-contrast, black and white photograph capturing a hand dropping a large quantity of fine white powder. The powder forms a dense, billowing cloud that fills much of the frame, creating a sense of motion and volume. The hand is visible at the bottom, with fingers slightly curled as it releases the substance. The background is dark, making the white powder stand out prominently.

NOTE:

With deep matt decors or surfaces such as AP, RO, SX, and NN, glossing can occur in daily use due to mechanical loads such as pushing objects (plates, glasses, cups, etc.) or selective abrasive cleaning. This effect is more pronounced in combination with dark decors and is comparable to the typical ageing of real slate. The decor acquires its own specific patina after time. This optical effect does not restrict the usability and is therefore not a defect. All surfaces comply with the standard requirements of EN 438.
